Changes to farm Acts will take us back to square one: Experts

New Delhi, 9 December

he central government's proposed changes to the farm Acts to assuage protesting farmers will dilute the existing legislations but restore states' powers of framing rules on agriculture marketing as was proposed in model Agricultural Produce Marketing Committee Acts circulated since 2003, experts feel.

The proposed changes, which were rejected by the agitating farmers on Wednesday, include giving states the right to frame rules to register private mandis and also levy fees or cess on par with the existing APMCs.

However, it does not give states powers to charge fees on all transactions outside mandis. The proposals also indicate that the Centre might consider giving states power to frame rules for registering new traders who will trade outside mandis. On the dispute resolution mechanism, the proposed changes include giving farmers powers to appeal in any civil court if they are not satisfied with the decision given under the existing provisions.

"If these dilutions are carried out then the whole essence of providing a free market and reforming the agricultural markets will be lost. If someone taxes outside mandis private trader, then the whole situation is back to square one" Mahendra Dev. director of Indira Gandhi Institute of Development Research, told Business Standard.

He said even earlier just around 30-40 per cent of farm produce went through the mandi, while the rest was sold outside and the farm Acts were meant to ensure that the produce sold outside remains out of the purview of taxes, but the proposal negates all that. "Then what was the need for bringing the acts in the first place," Dev said.

However, Sukhpal Singh, professor and chairperson in the Centre for Management of Agriculture at IIM-Ahmedabad, had a different take. He said the amendments are similar to those proposed in the first model APMC Bill of 2003.

Farmers sit on a tractor as they listen to a speaker during a protest against the newly passed farm Acts, at Singhu border near New Delhi, on Wednesday

In that, too, states had powers to tax new markets, register new players under bylaws. He said any amendment is meant to dilute the original provisions of an Act.

Singh said the one big change that has been proposed by the Centre's is allowing farmers to approach civil courts if they are not satisfied with the decision given by the existing authority. "This I feel wasn't there in the original model APMC Act as well that was circulated among states," he said.

"I have always felt that the first model APMC Act circulated in 2003 was a better piece of legislation as it gave adequate power to the states to do farm marketing reforms, which the new Acts sought to take back. But, with the proposed changes, the scenario is once again coming back to what prevailed ear-

Farmers reject...

The central government tried to assure farmers that the new farm Acts would not encroach upon their land and said it was willing to further strengthen their provisions to remove doubts, if any.

"The Acts clearly state that they aren't an encumbrance upon the land of the farmer, but if there is any doubt, it can be further clarified," stated the document sent by the central government to the agitating

On the registration of contracts in the Contract Farming Act, the Centre said there was a provision that states would have the right to register such agreements between a buyer and a farmer. But till such time an authority is not framed, a copy of the said agreement would have to be deposited with the sub-divisional magistrate concerned.

Meanwhile, a delegation of Opposition parties, including Rahul Gandhi from the Congress, Sharad Pawar from the Nationalist Congress Party, Sitaram Yechury from the Communist Party of India (Marxist), D Raja from the Communist Party of India, and T K S Elangovan from the Dravida Munnetra Kazhagam, met President Ram Nath Kovind to urge him to persuade the government to yield to the demands of protesting farmers and repeal the three farm Bills, which, incidentally, the President had already given assent to, making them law.

This scheme is a significant improvement from the previous EPF subsidy scheme announced in March, when the government had decided to only foot the EPF contribution of firms with up to 100 workers and where 90 per cent of the workers earned up to ₹15,000 per month.

A critical aspect of the scheme is that employers will have to add at least two new employees if they have a total workforce of less than 50. Employers will have to hire a minimum of five new employees if their workforce is more than 50. They will have to maintain this minimum net addition to their workforce each month from October this year to June 2021 to be eligible for the scheme, added sources.
